

The FCC should not implement any proposal that would lessen Indiana's Telephone Privacy law protections. I own a vacation cottage in Indiana, and our weekends were constantly interrupted with telemarketers, and they even left messages on our answering machine. Now we have virtually none of those interruptions.

In my opinion, the FCC should look at the laws passed by states such as Indiana and make a national regulation that is more stringent than what you are currently proposing.